A BUNCH OF THINGS CONNECTED
Kirra Kusy and Anna Evans

The work of Anna Evans (UK) and Kirra Kusy (U.S.A) is characterized by and begins with the observation of their surroundings. Both inhabit cities, making them vibrate as they pass through their bodies. They collect their characteristics and elements to filter them, recomposing new ways of inhabiting through decontextualization and modification. In her works we observe forms and objects that are familiar to us, but taken to places that generate new narratives through their connections.

In Kusy's case, these modifications are thought through stories, understanding that each found object contains a past energy that dictates the relationship with the rest of the devices. In the case of Evans, hidden patterns are analyzed and merged with landscape and language, creating works that are resolved in a variety of ways.

For the current exhibition A Bunch of things connected, curated by Laura Llaneli, the space has been thought of as a place that is transformed with two forceful interventions, one under our feet and one over our heads.

Kirra Kusy is a multidisciplinary artist from Colorado, U.S.A, now based in Barcelona. Her current work involves mending, gathering, repurposing, and removing from the origin. Assuming the role of a mediator, her aim is to collect and assemble elements from local surroundings in order to create a fusion of devices. The source resides in items that have been displaced and are now used as materials in a language of cultivation.

Anna Evans is originally from the UK, now living In Barcelona, via London, New York and Mumbai. With a background in graphics, illustration and photography, her practice seeks to explore visual storytelling and conceptual spaces. Taking the physical city as a starting point, she investigates hidden worlds, constructed narratives, and the real and imagined patterns of our lives and landscapes. She works across a wide range of traditional and contemporary media, also incorporating fiction and other writing. She is interested in rhythm, repetition, pattern, and paradox.
